AN EFFECTIVE SPEECH.

How Old Wolf Illustrated His Remarks with Great Effect.

In talking last evening about Indians and their native eloquence, Mr. Fairfield said to a Seattle (Wash.) Press reporter that he saw Old Wolf, the Cheyenne chief, make an effective speech with a lead pencil during a visit by Bishop Brundel at Ashland, Mont. Old Wolf took the pencil and drew a straight line and said:

"Cheyenne straight."

Then he drew another straight line and said:

"Black robe straight," meaning the Indian had nothing to say against the Catholic missionaries.

Then a third straight line was drawn and Old Wolf said:

"White House straight." By this he did not mean the Executive mansion, but the little white school conducted by the Sisters of Charity, which was known far and near among the Indians as the "White House."

Next a straight line was drawn part way across the page, and from one end he made a number of very crooked lines so that the diagram looked like a cat-o-nine tails. This was explained by the old man:

"Washington straight, but all things coming from Washington very crooked."

Then a line was drawn straight part of the way, then crooked, then straight, and so on across the page.

"Indian agent straight, crooked, straight, crooked, straight, crooked," was the laconic explanation.

"Crow fly round, round, round," was the sarcastic way he illustrated the characteristics of the Crow Indians by a series of loops across the page. But the climax of this speech was reached when Old Wolf drew across the paper a very crooked line and remarked with manifest contempt:

"Sioux crooked, always crooked."

PENALTY OF POLITENESS.

One Time When Good Manners Were Not Their Own Reward.

Ex-Governor and Representative McCreary, of Kentucky, is noted for his politeness, says the New York Tribune. On one occasion he was the guest of a friend in the country. When he sat down to supper the lady of the house asked him whether he wished coffee or tea. The Governor replied:

"Coffee, if you please, madam."

His fondness for hot coffee is known to his friends, who can well imagine his delight when the hostess informed him that the cook had neglected to warm the coffee for supper and that it was cold. Upon this information of the cook's neglect did not affect the Governor's politeness, and with a smile he replied:

"How fortunate, madam! Do you know, madam, that I am so eccentric as to prefer cold coffee and do not care for it in any other way? Your cook's neglect is good news to me."

The relief of the housekeeper can be understood as the handed Governor McCreary the coffee, which he sipped with well-feigned pleasure.

The weather the next day was cold and bracing. It was just such a day as to make the heart of a coffee-drinker long for his favorite drink. Governor McCreary had forgotten the incident of the night before when he sat down to breakfast. But if it had escaped his memory it had not that of his hostess.

"I have the coffee cold for you this morning, Governor," she said sweetly. "You see I remember that you said you never liked it in any other way."

The smile on Governor McCreary's face was hardly as angelic as it was the night before, but he drank the cold coffee without a murmur. It was with difficulty, however, that the other guests restrained their laughter over the unfortunate predicament in which the Governor had placed himself by his politeness.

ON THE GRINDSTONE.

How Boys Tried to Get Rid of Their Leather Trousers.

A hundred years ago or more it was customary in some parts of New England for men and boys to wear trousers made of leather, says the Youth's Companion. The historian of the town of Wells, Me., remarks that such garments were not altogether satisfactory, for the rather curious reason that they lasted too long.

We remember hearing a matron of the olden times tell a story of the two boys of one of their neighbors. They had begged of their mother that they might lay aside their leather trousers and have a pair made of domestic cloth; but all their entreaties were in vain. She would give them no other encouragement than to promise that when the leather was worn out they should have a pair of homespun.

They endured for a long time the vexation of the unyielding garments, which promised to be as lasting as the raiment of the Israelites in the wilderness.

Finally all hope failed the boys and their wits came to their aid. They took to the grindstone. One sat upon it while the other turned the crank. In imagination they saw themselves already clothed in the long-desired homespun.

But, alas! their hopes were suddenly blasted. All at once their father came round the corner of the barn and discovered them thus employed. They had still to wear the leather—for how much longer the historian is unable to say.

A boarding house mistress has added another ornament to her wall decorations.

It is in the shape of a motto which reads thus: "Laugh and grow fat."

She wants to give the mouths of her boarders something to do.

THE BOSTON WOMAN.

She Is Not Only Transcendentally Delightful, But She Is Superb.

Of all the complex products of modern civilization it is to be doubted if there is any thing more astonishing or more inexplicable than that thing which the Boston woman calls her mind, writes Aolo Bates in the Chicago Tribune. Boston men, as a rule, do not take the trouble to assert their possession of any thing of the sort, and, if they have a mind, simply use it and say nothing about it. But the Boston woman has her mind on her conscience, so to speak, and while she has left none of the supersensitiveness toward conduct which plagued her ancestors, she does agonize over the proper cultivation of her mind, her ethical sense exhausting itself in this direction.

It would be interesting to know just where the Boston woman draws the line between amusement and cultivation, if, indeed, she draws it anywhere. She mixes lectures and receptions, study classes and luncheon parties, so thoroughly and with such an air of looking at them from the same point of view that one can not tell whether it is that she takes every thing so seriously, or looks upon all so frivolously. The impression which the looker-on inevitably gets is that whatever her attitude toward one is her attitude toward all; but masculine perspicacity is seldom able to discover just what this is.

At the present moment the Mind—it should always be spelled with a large M, and my unfitness to treat of the subject is, it is to be feared, shown by the lower-case letters above!—is given in about equal proportions to the Greek play, to luncheons and afternoon teas, which are as thick as leaves in Vallombrosa, and to philosophy. The luncheons are dreadful festivities, chiefly confined to the fairsex, which last for about three hours, have as many courses as a dinner, and completely spoil not only the day but the evening. Of the Greek play there is more to be said when the time comes, and the philosophy is in the shape of lectures. In the first place, Prof. Royce, of Harvard, has been lecturing in drawing-rooms about Spinoza and other distinguished and distinctly incomprehensible philosophers. He has undoubtedly taught much, and one of the results has been the quickening of an intense desire to master—or, as I am speaking of women, should I say mistress?—all knowledge.

"I was so fired by the lecture one day," a Boston woman said, "that I went straight to the library for a volume of Fichter. I was determined to know all there was in his philosophy to know, but I thought I would begin with a small volume first. I asked the librarian for the smallest volume on Fichter she had, and she gave me a little book that looked as though a baby might master it, it was so small and pretty. But the viciousness of that volume I can not begin to express to you. I sat down with it one night, and I could not comprehend the first word. It was worse than a nonsense rhyme, and it wasn't half so amusing. But I said to myself: 'I have taken it in the evening when my brain isn't clear.' But the next morning when the state of things in nine houses out of ten where I pay social visits," said Joseph Darcal. And as I recalled the homes of our wedable but unwedded maids I concluded that Joseph was not wrong, and what is most needed by our young men is not courage but "a chance."

PLAYING WITH DOLLS.

A Passion as Strong in the Hearts of Women as in Those of Girls.

Two cultivated women, whose lives are devoted to study and philanthropic pursuits, recently spent a summer at their childhood's home, where a distant relative now lives, says the Youth's Companion. The host, knowing their position in the world of action, half-dreaded entertaining two such important personages.

"But I got well over my fear the second day after they came," said she. What do you suppose they did? They went up in the attic where their old playthings were stored, and unpacked their dolls' clothes. Then they took the little undergarments down into the kitchen, washed them and spread them on the grass to whiten.

"After that they did them up carefully, and packed them away again with sprigs of lavender in the little trunk. 'We can't bear to have them grow yellow,' said Miss Martha to me. 'We were so fond of our dolls, and we did have such a fine time making those clothes! Mother's stitches are in them, too.'"

The womanly instincts of love for children and love of dolls are intimately connected. A girl of seventeen was one day found by a school friend, busily sewing on a child's dress.

"It's for the Orphans' Home," she said, in explanation. "Don't praise me. I am not doing it for charity. I simply can't forget my play with dolls, and now that I have packed my little family away, for very shame, I want to amuse myself by making clothes for dolls of flesh and blood."

A middle-aged woman who adopted a child was one day asked by a friend, prone to look on the melancholy side of life, if she expected some time to enjoy her.

"Expect!" cried she; "why, the very first time I took her in my arms, I felt as if Mehitable Arabella, my old rag doll, had come to life. I haven't had such a happy minute in thirty years."

The fellow who forgets a good deal that has happened does n't worry us half so much as the fellow who remembers a good deal that never happened.

VEGETABLE IVORY.

The Source and Use of a Queer-Looking Tropical Nut.

On the Atlantic docks in Brooklyn a few days ago, a reporter of the New York Evening Post picked up a queer-looking nut. In size it might be compared with a walnut, though it was somewhat larger; but in shape it was very different, being not round, but flat on several sides. It differed also from the walnut in the surface of its shell, which resembled the chestnut's in color, but not so smooth; and it differed still more in the substance of its shell, which offered only a moderate resistance to the point of a penknife. The moment, however, that the shell was penetrated, a resistance was encountered which was by no means moderate. The nut inside was a solid white substance, almost as hard as marble.

Ascertaining that this was a specimen of the ivory nuts, which are articles of commerce, the reporter visited the chief local dealer in them and asked some questions about their nature and uses. The dealer said: "While 'ivory nut' is the name used in this country, the Spanish name is 'tagua,' and in England and Germany the nut is known as the 'corozoe nut'—which it is not, the corozoe nut being something entirely different. The nut without its shell is here also called 'vegetable ivory.' It is one of the uncultivated products of South America, and is imported chiefly from Ecuador and the United States of Colombia. It grows upon a species of palm tree about fourteen feet high, which is found in immense groves along the banks of the larger streams, preferring low, marshy soil, but not disdaining the higher ground. What is called the female tree yields a perfumed blossom, and, like the cocoanut tree, bears buds and blossoms at the same time that the ripened nuts are dropping to the ground. The 'male tree' also blossoms, but its flowers never turn to fruit. The nuts grow in thick clusters close to the trunk of the tree. They are gathered by the natives, who carry them in canoes or on their backs in baskets from the groves to the towns and villages along the rivers, where they sell them for a mere trifle. The traffic in the United States of Colombia is chiefly on the Magdalena river, and in Ecuador along various streams. The nuts are collected at the villages by small, flat-bottomed steamers, burning wood for fuel, and drawing only four and a half feet of water when loaded. These carry the nuts principally to Aspinwall, whence they are shipped in schooners and by the steamers of the Atlas line to the various importing places. The schooners are rarely loaded with ivory nuts alone, but receive about half their cargo in cocoanuts, which are invariably put on top of the ivory nuts; the latter would break the cocoanuts if their positions were reversed, while the cocoanuts could as easily break a pile of cannon balls.

"Hamburg, Germany, is the largest market for ivory nuts. New York comes next, and is the only port in this country to which they are shipped. San Francisco tried the trade but had to give it up. London is third, though not many years ago it was second. I think that perhaps fashion has had something to do with it in setting its face against articles made from the ivory nut.

"These articles are principally buttons, and for a common or medium-grade button there is no better material. At the factories boys called 'shuckers' are employed to knock off the shells of the nuts. The ivory is then taken by sawyers and slabbed; that is, cut with fine saws into disks. After being assorted as to sizes the slabs are put in bins to dry thoroughly. At first they are bluish white; when dried they lose some of their bulk and turn dead-white. Next, girls put them into turning-machines by which they are converted into various button shapes. Dyers then take them and turn them out of their vats in four or five sets of colors. To others a mottled appearance is imparted with brushes. They are also made to imitate ivory closely tortoise-shells, black cloths, especially black silk, and Scotch goods. I dare say you have often had ivory-nut buttons on your clothing, and thought they were bone or cloth-covered. They wear and hold a polish excellently. Such things as baby rattles, umbrella heads, cane heads, and hooks and eyes, are also made from ivory-nuts.

"The older the 'ivory' gets, the harder it becomes, and, if undyed, the whiter. Its usefulness has become greatly restricted by the small size of the nut. Experiments have long been unsuccessfully tried to make the ivory into blocks of any size by reducing the nuts to powder and then moulding the mass together by powerful machine pressure. If any one could succeed in inventing means to do this, it is safe to say a fortune would await him. 'Vegetable ivory' would then supersede celluloid, which is affected by moisture and smells of camphor, and is also much more expensive. The supply of ivory nuts is vast. At the head of the Amazon river, not to mention other parts of South America, there are thousands of acres thickly covered with nuts, which, lost for years untouched, are rotting away."

"In the market here eight grades are recognized, according to the places from which the nuts come. The Ecuador nut rank highest, and of these there are two grades, the first coming from Tumaco, and the second from Guayaquil."

A North Carolina editor puts on his free list every woman in the state who becomes the mother of twin boys.

CHANGES IN NEBRASKA.

The Liar in the Gray Ulster Meets the Original Liar, and Succumbs.

"It beats all how things have changed in Nebraska in the last few years," said the man in the gray ulster as he compared his watch with that of a New York Sun man and found they agreed.

"In what respect?" asked the man with a sore throat.

"Well, take it in the matter of bravado, for instance. Five or six years ago I was in a bank in one of the towns out there, when a chap came in, thrust a revolver at the cashier's nose, and demanded and got $4,000 which was lying around. He nodded good-bye to me as he went out, and nobody thought of shooting at him until he was riding away."

"And how is it now?"

"Well, I was in the same bank again one day last week. In walked a chap with a pistol in his hand demanding the money in sight. The cashier waited to make an entry, stopped to a glass to brush his hair, and then came around the railing and hopped on to the desperado and hammered him until I begged of him as a personal favor to let up."

"And then he let up?"

"Yes; but very reluctantly."

"And then the desperado presented you with a silver-mounted revolver as a token of his gratitude?"

"He did, but how on earth did you—"

"And he begged the cashier's pardon, and explained that his mother in Massachusetts was dying, and he wanted money to go to her!"

"That's it, that's it; but how did you get the particulars?"

"And then you raised a purse of $75, and sent the man on to see his mother die?"

"I did, I did; but who told you all this?"

"And the man is now one of the leading merchants of Scottsboro?"

"He is, but tell me how you got things so straight? Did the cashier tell you?"

"Oh, no; the story is an old lie of my own invention! I remember now that you were in Denver and heard me tell it to a crowd in a hotel. You have simply stolen it and are using it as your own."

"Just my luck," sighed the man in the gray ulster, as he arranged his satchel for a pillow. "If I get to sleep some of you please wake me up at about 10:50."

HE DISPERSED THE BOYS.

An Aged Librarian Was Too Much for the Hilarious Students.

A party of students in the big university down at Delaware, the Ohio Wesleyan, were out enthusiastically serenading various members of the faculty and other functionaries of the college the other evening, and in their triumphant course, for their music swept every thing before it, they stopped in front of the residence of the college librarian, Mr. Joseph Dickinson, says the Toledo Blade.

Festooning themselves along the high board fence which incloses the librarian's estate, the quiet strains of the tin can and the long, tremulous notes of the bull-horn floated out upon the ambient atmosphere. The sweet tones of the bass drum, the ravishing music of those all-night voices and the grand ensemble of the whole choir were not long in bringing the old librarian to his front porch. His eyes swept in at a glance the row of students draped over his front fence and then rolled slowly and sentimentally up to the deep sky, bespangled with its stars, sparkling in January's frost. The old moon, wading on its cloud-fleece beds, shed a soft, sophomoric glamor over all the scene.

The soft sentiment of the hour stole into the old librarian's soul and he stood in silent rapture as one transfixed by a paean of the angelic hosts. And the rattle of the tin pan and the hoarse notes of the fish-horn, the wails of the score of sentimental youths still beat upon the soft air and shattered it into atmospheric atoms. But there came a lull. The music died away in a low, lingering wail. The air held again the solemn stillness. Then the trembling voice of the deeply affected librarian arose in the stilly night air, and said slowly:

"Gentlemen, I dislike to disturb you and interrupt that classic concert, but I just had that fence painted to-day."

Many Strings to Her Bow.

The Louisville Commercial tells the seemingly incredible story that at a party a few nights ago a young man, while out upon the veranda for a smoke, overheard his fiancee acknowledge being in love with the man she was then with, saw him kiss her, and then heard her promise to marry him. When they left he was so stunned that he stayed where he was until he was startled by another couple coming to the same window. He started to leave, but recognizing the voice of his fiancee he stood still and was witness to the same proceedings that had first caused him pain. He was so overpowered with grief that he sank down upon the porch and in an agony of expectation waited to see if it would happen again. Again it did happen; in fact, it happened twice more. Upon escorting the fickle lady home after the party he told her that, having become engaged to four men that night, she would not miss his ring or himself, and he therefore wanted to be released from his engagement, to which the damsel assented.

SAN FRANCISCO AGENTS.

JOHN F. FRISHOLM, Manager of the Central & Northern California Press Association, No. 306 Bush, corner of Montgomery street.

G. H. KELLOGG, 339 Pine street.

The following plans have been submitted for the Reform School building to be erected at Ione, Amador county, which, with slight changes, will probably be adopted: They provide for a large main building, three stories, with basement and attic, and a two story annex 130 feet in length, separated from the main building with which it will connect by a covered passageway. The main building has a frontage of 178 feet, and a width of 50 feet.

John Boyle O'Reilly, the poet and editor of the Boston Pilot, suddenly died on last Sunday, supposed to be from an overdose of chloral taken for insomonia. His age was 56 years. He was convicted of high treason and sentenced to be shot, but was finally banished to Sidney, from whence he escaped in an open boat, was picked up by an American ship and taken to Philadelphia.

The English Government informed Cardinal Rampolla, Papal Secretary of State, that it was impossible for England to receive a Papal Envoy or send a Minister to the Vatican. It had been suggested by the Vatican that a Secretary be attached to the British Legation at Vienna, whose duty it would be to conduct negotiations with the Vatican and sometimes visit Rome.

Heretofore England has bought silver at a low figure and paid the silver for India wheat. Now that silver has risen and remained at near par value for seven years, the price of Indian wheat is advanced just that much and is handicapped by that percentage in competition with American wheat.

The census will be reported to Congress the last of this month, and in September the apportionment will be made. It is expected that it will be one to each 180,000. This will increase the membership about 25, making 355.

TAKE CARE! THERE IS DANGER

In allowing inactivity of the kidneys to grow through neglect. The deadly shoals of Bright's disease and diabetes will wreck the goodly bark of health if it is allowed to drift rudderless upon them. The bladder, too, if inactive, and judicious medication does not speedily direct the helm toward the port of safety, will be wrecked by the quicksand of disease. In selecting a diuretic, let your choice fall upon Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which stimulate the renal organs without irritating and exciting them, two effects to be apprehended from the unmedicated stimulants resorted to. These have a tendency to react prejudicially. The Bitters invigorate the kidneys and bladder, in common with the nerves and the digestive organs, and so afford lasting aid. It also affords distinct assistance in preventing and curing intermittent and remittent fever. Biliousness, constipation and rheumatism it also subjugates.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY.

Good Agricultural Land for $10 to $20 per Acre.

The Pacific Improvement Company has recently purchased twelve thousand acres of land in the heart of Tehama County, for the purpose of promoting subdivision and settlement. This land embraces lands from first-class Sacramento Valley agricultural land, to land of fair average quality, and is offered at from $10 to $20 per acre, in subdivisions of 40, 80, 120, 160 and 320 acres.

The terms upon which these lands are offered are especially attractive. They will be sold in subdivisions, as above indicated, by the payment of interest only for three years, at which time the purchaser can begin the payment of principal by paying the first of five equal annual installments. Thus no part of the principal is to be paid for three years and then the purchaser is to have five years in which to pay five equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, making payments extending over a period of eight years. Intending purchasers are assured that this is an opportunity to purchase land of fair average quality at $10 per acre, with other grades of land at prices to correspond between these figures.

The assertion is frequently made that good lands, suitable for general farming, and especially adapted for fruit growing, cannot be had in California for less than from $50 to $100 an acre. An examination of the land subject of this advertisement will prove to home seekers that this is an opportunity for the purchase of good agricultural land at $20 per acre, and for qualities grading down to fair agricultural land at $10 an acre, on terms of payment which should make the disposition of these lands to actual settlers a result easy of accomplishment.

The primary object of the purchase of this body of land was the breaking up of a large holding for the purpose of promoting its settlement in smaller quantities and its devotion to diligent husbandry.

"LITTLE BO PEEP

has lost her sheep and couldn't tell where to find them." So the old nursery rhyme says, and it goes on to bid her "Leave them alone and they'll come home and bring their tails behind them." All this may be true of lost sheep, but if you have lost your health you cannot afford to leave that alone. It will not come back of its own accord. Some people brag that they never bother about colds. They "let them go the way they came." Alas! too often the victims go—to a consumptive's grave. Until very recently a cure for Consumption, which is universally acknowledged to be scrofula affecting the lungs, would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it if taken in time and given a fair trial. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when other means have failed. Thousands gratefully testify to this. It is the most potent tonic, or strength restorer, alterative, or blood-cleanser, and nutritive, or flesh builder known to medical science. For Lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, "Liver Complaint" and Dyspepsia or Indigestion, it is an unequaled remedy.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY cures the worst cases, no matter of how long standing. 50 cents, by druggists.

Any single one will be sent on receipt of 2 cents in stamps except "Wages, Living and Tariff," which will be sent for 4 cents.

a Combination, Proportion, and Process of operation, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truthfully be said, "100 doses one dollar." Others require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown and has won the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered."

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has attained such popularity in so short a time. It

Is Peculiar to Itself.

Peculiar in the originality and effectiveness of its advertising, its methods are continually being copied by competitors.

Peculiar in the way it wins the people's confidence, one bottle always sells another.

OFFICE OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY, MONO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN TO THE ABOVE NAMED DELINQUENT PURCHASERS OF SCHOOL LANDS IN MONO COUNTY, STATE OF CALIFORNIA, that, if the several amounts due from each of said Delinquents are not paid in FIFTY DAYS AFTER THE DATE OF THIS NOTICE, in pursuance of Law I will commence suits to FORECLOSE the interest of each of said purchasers or the assignees of said purchasers of said Land, and to annul the Certificate of Purchase, the cost of advertising, the costs of suit, and $10 Attorney's fees in each case.

Dated this 12th day of August, 1890.

CHARLES L. HAYES,
aug16 District Attorney of Mono County.

ORIGIN OF POPULAR PHRASES.

Seedy—Weary, worn out, out of sorts. Saxon soldre, weary, sated, sick.) A hat or coat is termed seedy when it has become shabby. A man is seedy after a debauch, when he looks and feels out of sorts.

Hue and Cry Maguire—A Bluff, free-living, murdering libertine, who commits the most horrible crimes without giving the slightest compunction. It is a character in M. Daurier's drama of D'Auberee en Bretagne. His accomplice is Bertrand, a simpleton and villain.

To Go the Rounds, or To Walk the Rounds—In former times ecclesiastical lawyers used frequently to give interviews to their clients in the Round Church; and "walk the round" meant nothing about the Round Church, under the hope of being hired as a witness.

Stuck-Up People—Pretentious people; parvenus; nobodies who assume to be somebodies. The allusion is to birds as the peacock which sticks up its tail; the turkey-cock, which sticks up its feathers generally, etc., to add to its "importance," and "look down" antagonists.

Plateau—This word was introduced into the English language in 1807. The editor of the Annual Register for that year describing the battle of Eylau, and having so mentioned a flattish hill, which he said 'in French military phraseology is called a plateau,' leaves it to be inferred by the intelligent reader that it is not to be understood literally, but that it is a term of art. It is a footnote to state that the word means a platform.

Putting the Right Foot Forward—One of the additions of Pythagoras was this: "When stretching forth your feet to have your sandals put on, first expect your right foot, but when about to step into a coach let your left foot enter first." Jamblichus says the hidden meaning is: "That worthy actions should be done heartily, but base ones should be avoided."

Manners and Customs Practiced in Polite Society.

Twelve o'clock is the usual hour selected for a day wedding, but this is a matter of individual choice. The Art Interchange suggests that the place and hour of the wedding must determine the kind of refreshments to be offered to the guests. If the wedding takes place in a house, and in the middle of the day, a substantial luncheon must be provided. If the ceremony is held at the church, followed by a small reception at the house of the bride's family, would be naturally followed by a 5 o'clock tea, when tea and coffee, cakes, ices and fruit would be the refreshments. These may be arranged on the dining room table and guests allowed to help themselves, or they may be handed around.

The One Thing to Teach Daughters.

There never was better advice given than that which Washington Irving once gave a lady:

"Don't be too anxious about the education of your daughters; they will do very well; don't teach them so many things; teach them one thing."

"What is that, Mr. Irving?" she asked.

"Teach them," he said, "to be easily pleased."

DIVIDING A CHURN.

How Deacon Davis Settled a Troublesome Controversy.

John Quincy Adams was noted for his [illegible] and for his tenacity of purpose—[illegible] even said he was self-willed and obstinate. The old gentleman was very fond of chess. But had a very distinct objection to being beaten. It is reported that when he discovered the [illegible] checkmate, he would often [illegible] in considering his next move [illegible] to [illegible] his adversary, and the game would end in a "draw."

A similar "masterly inactivity" is often shown by selfish people who hope by delay to [illegible] when something should be done, to gain an advantage. An anecdote, told in "Glimpses of Life in West[illegible]," illustrates this trait of human selfishness.

Mr. Davis, a deacon and one of the most prominent men of the town, married for his second wife a widow, who lived in New Hampshire. She had [illegible] barrel-churn with one of her children, each of whom paid half of the cost. After the marriage, Mr. Davis rode over to this neighbor's to arrange about the churn.

He proposed two plans—that she should sell him her share in the churn, or buy Mrs. wife's, but she would not agree to either of them. At last, when Mr. Davis saw that the woman was determined to retain, if possible, not only her own but Mrs. Davis' share of the churn, he went out to the wagon, and came back with a saw.

"I anticipated there might be trouble," said he, "and I came prepared for it."

Then he quietly sawed the churn in two, and with the remark: "We are willing to give you the largest half," left her with the side that had the crank.

A Scientific Cannon.

A cannon, even though a small one, is not usually regarded as a necessary part of an explorer's outfit. Such a weapon has, however, been trundled into Northern Thibet by the expedition which the late General Prejevalsky headed. According to Russian reports this cannon is expected to serve the very pacific purpose of determining the rate at which sound travels through rarefied air at heights of 12,000 feet and upward. Like firearms made for the African trade, its chief function will be to make a noise, and it has the unique distinction of being a cannon with a purely scientific purpose.

How awkward most people are with their left hands! There is no reason, at least no necessity for this, but it is true. It is partly due to heredity and partly to habit and practice, but it could be overcome. The left arm and hand might be cultivated to the same degree of dexterity, which literally means right-handedness, as the right arm and hand, but it involves trouble, time and patience, and therefore is neglected. The left arm has good reason to complain of this injustice.

The Weight of the World.

Greville Walpole, L. L. D., of London, writes to the Detroit Free Press to say that the world was successfully weighed many years ago, and its weight was found to be 5,874,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons! Any body who wants the earth can now realize how greedy he is. What a load poor old Atlas had to carry!

Wanted to Save Their Necks.

The most comical mishap that ever befell a fire engine occurred recently at Toledo. The noise of an approaching fire apparatus startled a sixty-five-year-old countryman and his wife as they were making their way along the sidewalk. To grab his wife's green umbrella and rush into the middle of the street directly in the path of the oncoming steeds was the work of a moment for the excited farmer. His gyrations and shouting brought the horses to a sudden stop. The fire ladies drove off swearing, but the crowd cheered the old fellow as he returned to the sidewalk, muttering: "Tarnation fools, let 'em run away if they want to. I'll never risk my life to save their necks again."

Cornwall's Uranium Mine.

The discovery of a lode of uranium at the Union mines, Cornwall, was announced several months ago. This is believed to be the only known lode of that metal in the world, as it had previously been found only in isolated pockets and patches. Since the discovery was made steps have been taken to develop the lode and to work the mine. Experimental works for procuring the metal from the ore were fitted up in London, and there the ore has been submitted to treatment in order to determine the best and most economical method of extraction. The market price of the metal is about ten thousand dollars per ton. It is proposed to substitute it for gold in electro-plating, and it is also expected to prove very useful in electric lighting.

A Nation of Knights.

The old remark that the Americans are a nation of colonels has lost much of its force, but few realize that we are rapidly becoming a nation of knights. Even now you couldn't throw a stone without hitting a Knight of Labor, or a Knight of Pythias, or a Knight of Honor, or a Knight of the Golden Horde, or a Knight Templar, or a Knight of the Silver Horn, or a dozen or so other varieties of knights. Now will some plain man arise and tell us why this craze for knighthood is so prevalent in a country where every man is a sovereign, and therefore vastly higher in rank than a knight.

Without a Smoke-Stack.

A locomotive on the Atlantic & Pacific railroad was run from Coolidge to Albuquerque, N. M., a few days ago without a smoke-stack, a barrel being substituted. The engineer says all he wants to pull a train is a steam chest, a pair of driving wheels and a fireman.

YOUNG WOMAN (timidly to clerk):—"I would like to look at some false hair, please." Clerk (experienced): — "Yes, ma'am. What color does your friend want?" Sale effected.

PORTIERES AND POPPING.

Curtained Door-Ways as Obstacles in the Way of Matrimony.

A few evenings ago, observes a Buffalo Courier writer, I said to my friend Darcal: "Joseph, why haven't you married?" The question seemed abrupt. I admit, but the moment was most propitious. As we sat in the coziest corner of the club room tasting a new and recompensing brand of cigars we talked awhile at random, and finally we, too, drifted to the subject of marriage in Buffalo. We spoke of the apparent reluctance of certain young men to do anything but dawdle about the objects of their adoration, and when Joseph said: "Do not blame them, perhaps it is not their fault," I put to him the startling question: "Joseph, why don't you marry?" Joseph took several long pulls at his cigar before replying, but finally said, his eyes fixed on the ascending smoke: "If you wish to know what has kept me from matrimony I will tell you. It is the portiere." I stared.

Joseph went on: "In other words, it is because parlors have no doors—because our modern houses are one vast whispering gallery in which the slightest sound is heard from one end to another. It is years since I have felt sure that I was absolutely alone with a girl—an environment necessary for sentimental demonstrations. But to particularize. It is not long since I became unusually interested in a young woman of my acquaintance. Perhaps I was in love with her. If not, I know that I might have become so. I paid her rather marked attention for nearly a year, but in my numerous visits to her house there was never an opportunity for any thing but the most formal convesation. Usually her father sat in the library across the hall in full hearing—if not in view—of us. No chance to shut a door. At the parlor door—portieres; at the library door—portieres; at the dining-room door—portieres; and never an opportunity for that sense of private toto-a-toto which gives a man inspiration for sentimental deeds.

"Now it is my idea that the time when mutual love is first acknowledged should be a supreme moment in life—one to be made the most of, and not to be thrown away by any such insensate proceeding as a proposal by letter, or even to be risked at unpropitious seasons, when interruption is probable or possible. Therefore, I did not tell my love with papa reading his paper in the adjoining room, or with the servant fumbling in the sideboard in the dining-room, with only a thickness of curtain between her and us. I did not tell my love while all the doors were wide open and the sisters were active in the upper halls, and I could hear the brother in his room overhead dressing to go out. No, I waited for some moment of assured privacy. It never came."

There was a long silence. "Well?" I said, at last. "That is all. Last summer the young woman in question made a visit to a provincial town where she could shut the parlor door. While there she became engaged and was married last autumn."

"And that is courtship as she is conducted in Buffalo." I sighed. "That is I tried it it was more incomprehensible than ever. I said to myself that ignorance was on the whole preferable to idiocy, even in Boston; and so I mildly but firmly carried the small book back to the library; and now I listen to the lectures as if they were not really meant to be understood, but only to be enjoyed as music. They are charming on that basis."

Prof. Louis Dyer is also giving lectures to the fashionable Boston women, and the conversation at the lengthy luncheons aforesaid turns upon lofty subjects at which the masculine head reels merely to hear mentioned. The women do play their part most admirably. They are as grave about it as children over the make-believes of their childish sports. They might really be in earnest for all one could tell from their manner.

"I am afraid I would never do for Boston," a clever Western girl said the other day. "I have frivolous moments even while the discussion of the universe and the ultimate end of man is going on. I even let my frivolous attention become absorbed in the exquisite flavor of an entree or a salad while I am hearing the deepest truths of philosophy discussed at an intellectual luncheon."

"You forget," she was answered, "that philosophy has no truths; it has only theories. But, laying that question aside, it is to be inferred from what you say that you must really be a Bostonian changed in your cradle. Your attitude is precisely that of the Boston woman, except that she consciously and deliberately lets her mind wander. Once a discussion is started in which she does not have to bear a part, she deliberately turns her mind out to grass and lets it run its unregenerated course. Her only care is to preserve an outward semblance of attention; and for assuming a comprehension and an enjoyment in topics in which one has not the slightest interest or understanding, the Boston woman is probably without rival in the world."

"How perfectly nasty," the Western girl protested. "Now, I think the Boston women, mind and all, are delightful."

"Delightful!" her interlocutor echoed. "They are without equal in the world. They are enchanting. Most women can humbug men, but the Boston woman can go to the length not only of humbugging women, but of accomplishing that doubtful feat upon her own self. She is not only delightful, but she is superb."

Food for the Mind.

Have something for the mind to feed upon, something to look forward to and live for besides the round of daily labor or the counting of profit and loss. If you have not any talent for writing splendid works on political economy or social science, or the genius for creating a good story or a fine poem, the next best thing—and, in fact, almost as good a thing—is to possess an appreciation of these things. So have good books and good newspapers, and read them, if only in snatches, and talk about them at dinner-time or by the evening fire.
